1. In December 1951 the Guerrilla Force Command¹ of the North Korean army established the East Advance Liaison Post to maintain communications with North Korean guerrillas in South Korea. On 5 July 1952 this post moved from DT-1065 to DT-2362. Communications between the post and the guerrillas was made by relay teams which were all staffed by graduates of the Seoul Political Academy, which was established by the North Korean Labor Party.
2. In July 1952 the East Advance Liaison Post,² which was attached to the 526 Army Unit,¹ was commanded by PAK Chong-nok (2613/6945/6922) and had a strength of 160 men. The post was organized into a liaison section with four reconnaissance platoons each composed of five teams of four men, a relay unit composed of ten teams of four men, a communications unit composed of five teams of about five men each, a rear section of ten men, a political section of three men, and a confidential personnel section.
3. In July 1952 the first reconnaissance platoon was at DT-439789, the second reconnaissance platoon at DT-239623, the third reconnaissance platoon at DT-360551, the relay unit at DT-230620, and the communications unit at DT-226621. All members of the post were armed with either M-1's, carbines, or pistols. Two Soviet-made trucks and six radios were operated by the post.
4. The duty of the reconnaissance platoon was to guide agents through enemy lines. The relay unit maintained communications between the post and guerrillas operating in South Korea, while the communications unit kept contact between the post and the Guerrilla Force Command.
5. Supplies for the East Advance Liaison Post were brought from the North Korean army advance command base at DT-171640. Each infiltration agent was supplied with 12 kilograms of rice, 1 kilogram of salt, 3 kilograms of rice powder, 6 packages of biscuits, 3 kilograms of rice cakes, 600 grams of candy, 150 grams
